caught by a shutter
printed black and white
and out of context.
split second from time
a glance, a grin
just a face on the page
to the eye;
to the mind,
a full memory
that says
it was a fine day.

when was the last time you thought of me?
when did my name come up last?
do you tell the kids how we used to be,
and how classes were in the past?
i think of you as i watch her grow, wishing you knew her, too.
for years i've wanted to let you know that an artist needs the likes of you.
remember all those days i cried?
remember all the times you tried to help me find the road to take?

i'm doing well; a few mistakes.
i don't teach, and i don't heal,
but i'm writing more these days.
trying to explain how young people feel by the end of the two hundredth page.
perhaps you don't feel what i do when you think about seventy-nine.
i know that it hurts not being with you —
a long-lost friend of mine.

FREE CONCERT
Tues, Nov. 30th
in the Civic Center
Van leaves at 7:00pm in the Chapel Parking Lot Starring: Bob Ayala and Melody Green—Christian Recording Artists

the room is hot with people;
i can see you in the mirror,
there, i see myself,
glass reflects glass;
each speaks in turn to the crowd and does not stop for the moment but steals from the present never to reveal a knowledge of the past
for the future.

your face
seeks mine
each turn reflects
new angles,
the truth once gone
now there,
slowly
i call you friend
feeling the anguish
and the ecstasy.

underneath a mauve and lavender sky
 i stood
 and it rained
 as if rain
 were what extinguished the brilliant evening sun, bringing me
 to life.

in the morning
 i was dry;
 i put on clean, dry clothes, feeling that usual monday-morning feeling of having to start this life
 all over again.
 i went slowly outside

and, underneath a hot and silent sky,
 i stood, wondering:
 in silence such as this, in all this silent land who —
 who would hear
 one woman sing?

the imprint is there
where you scattered blankets on this beach without sand.

not the first day of spring
but the first day of sun entices you from classrooms for that rosy look
that deepens to bronze.

now you've left it
following the sun.
(you always follow the sun)
you fix faces perfectly for the parties tonight.
(fraternity means brotherhood.
do they realize that?)

crows pick over debris
that you left behind
and call to each other
as they heard you do.

the scent drifts down
from the stables above —
down the hill
where scavengers search for something real
and go unrewarded.

the toy box
tastes of old cedar and dust.
father's overcoat
lingers in the scent.
covers become dragons
in the dark
and i could be seven again.

this is memory:
a closet full of random images
that hang together
as childhood.

a book, covers closed,
is not recalled by words.
it takes the texture of light
on a stranger's hand
paired with the shadow of a tree
to make the fine print
that writes the past.
